Heart to Heart....

Security - Real and False

Last year I gave into the "necessity" of using E-mail and thus gaining access to the Internet.

What a world of information! You can find out virtually anything you want (so I am told). The other day I went "shopping in London" - and as a result ordered a computer program.

What concerns me about all this modern technology, is that it starts to create a new class system - "us and them". The "us" being those who are not computer literate and "them" being those who are into this new world of technology, (or vice versa depending which group you fit into).

However it's not just about those who use the Internet or not, it relates to and affects those who are unfamiliar with new banking techniques - plastic cards etc. I hear stories of people (usually the older generation) who are becoming alienated by the new technology.

It's a scary new world we find ourselves living in - ruled by corporate giants, financial "wizards" - who are more influential than our governments.

It would seem that profit, financial security, are dominating not just the global economies, but also how we live locally.

Jesus said: "What if a person gain the whole world, yet loses their sole?" "Come to me, and you will find rest for your soles ..."
